

4.2. RAO engagement with each of the four themes of the GPRS II

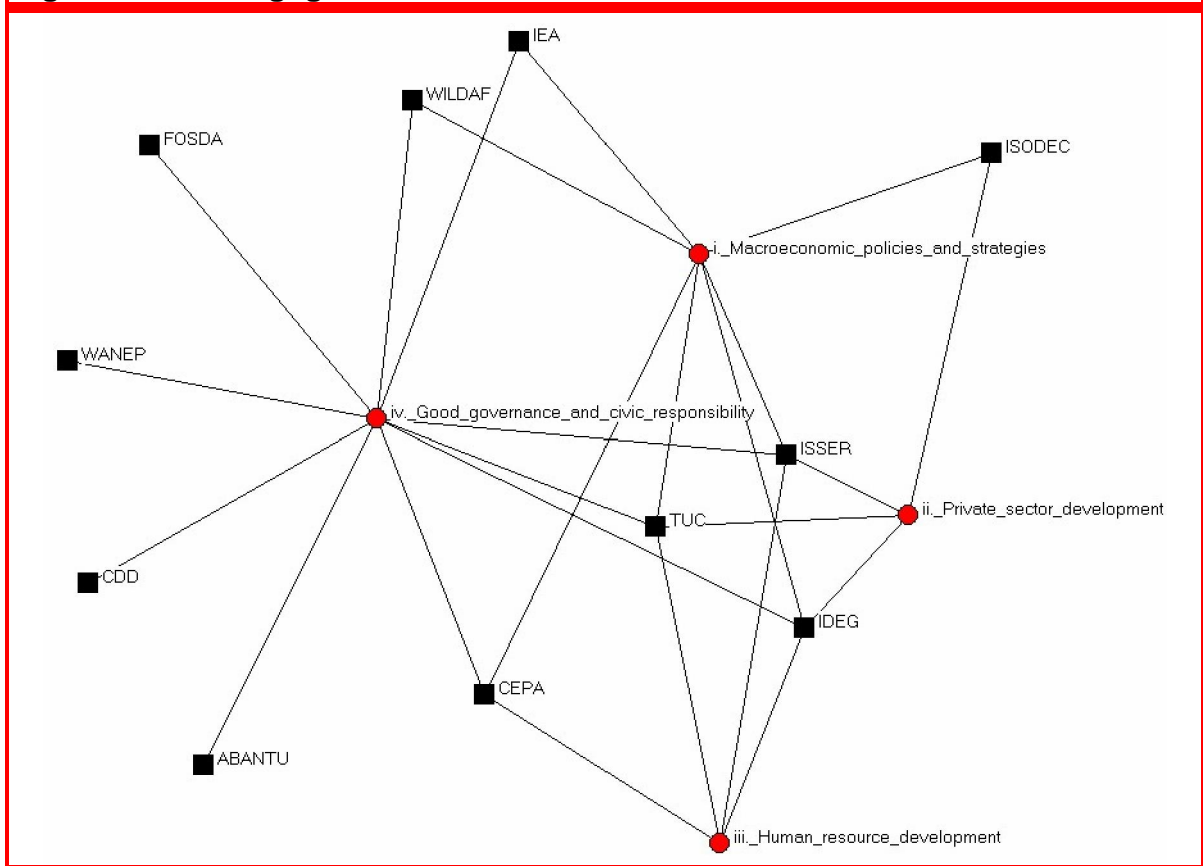

Eleven of the RAOs responded to questions about their engagement with GPRS II . The number of RAOs reporting engagement with each GPRS II theme is summarised in Table 6 below.

	# RAOs
i. Macroeconomic policies and strategies	7
ii. Private sector development	4
iii. Human resource development	4
iv. Good governance and civic responsibility	10

Figure 8 below provides more detail, showing which of the four main themes of the GPRS II that each of the NGOs is engaged with.

Lines indicate some form of RAO engagement. The survey did not identify the relative scale or importance of each NGOs' engagement with each theme. Red nodes = GPRS themes. Black nodes = surveyed RAOs. Similarity of position of 2 or more nodes usually means similarity of relationships to GPRS II themes. Length of line is not significant

4.2.1 RAO engagement with issues within the "Good governance and civic responsibility" theme

Using the headings provided in the relevant sections of the GPRS II document RAOs were asked about their engagement with the more specific issues associated with each of these themes. The distribution of RAO's engagement with each of the "good governance" issues is summarised in Table 6 below . "1" = some form of NGO engagement.

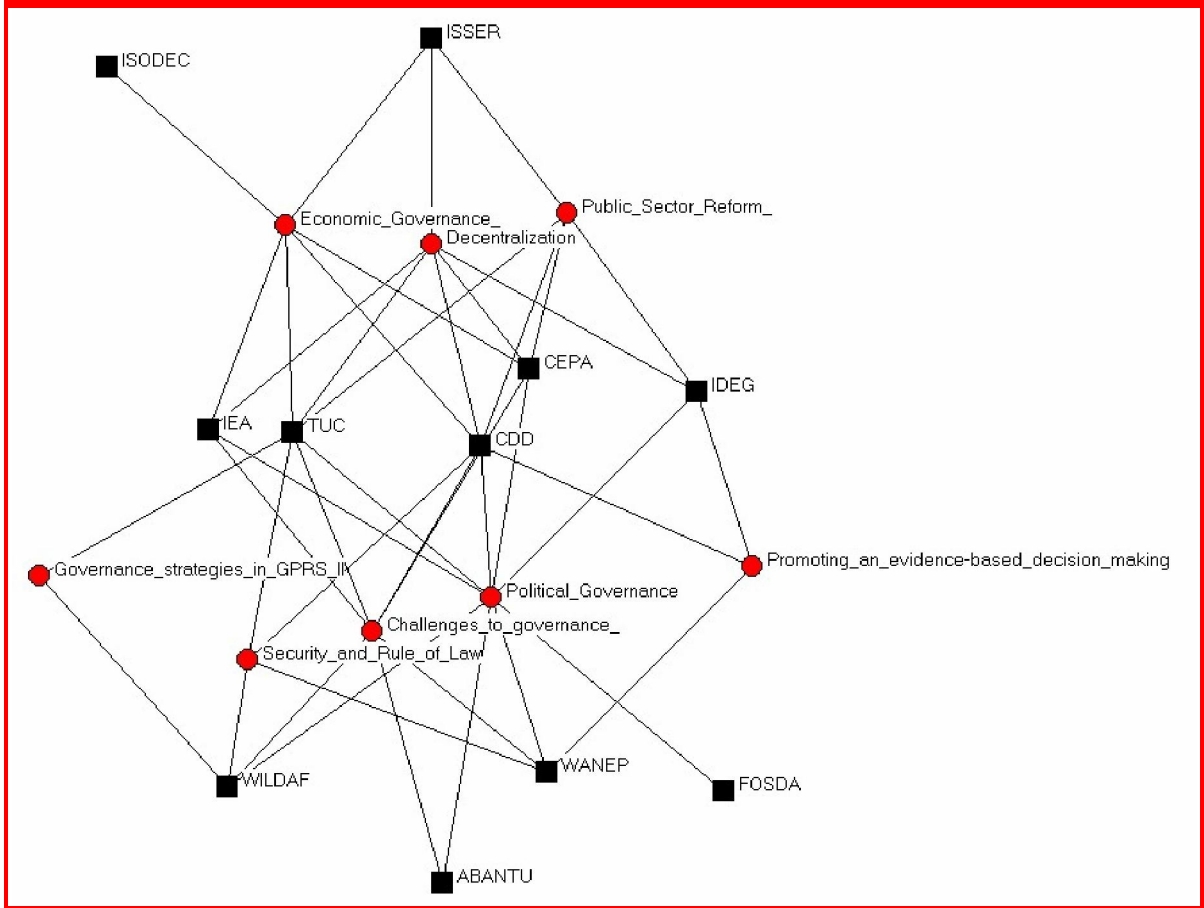

Good corporate governance was not being addressed by any of the RAOs,

4.2.5 Using this data planning, monitoring and evaluation purposes

As with relationships shown in section 4.1, RAOs with structurally similar sets of relationships to GPRS II issues might be expected to be talking to each other, to coordinate their work. At least to minimise conflicts, and ideally to maximise opportunities. Is this happening? Examples of structurally similar sets of relationships in the Figures above include ISSER and TUC in Figure 11 (Human resources), TUC and IDEG in Figure 10 (Macro-economy).

The converse of this response would be to identify, possibly in a workshop setting, where are the gaps in RAO responses. What issues seem to be neglected, when we look at the collective picture? Amongst the four themes "Good governance..." was receiving above average attention, but "Private sector development" and "Human resource development" were receiving much less so. Within each theme, some issues were the focus of more RAO attention than others. In the "Private sector development" theme the "Developing additional sectors to support growth" issue was attended to by only one RAO, and a similar case can be seen in the "Human resource development" theme.

There are limitations to this part of the survey which could be overcome by further work. The menu of issues was taken from the section headings in the GPRS II document. But this list of issues was not complete, in the sense that a number of interviewed RAOs were able to report other issues of concern to them that were not listed in the GPRS II. Possibly in a workshop setting, a revised menu list of policy issues could be generated by the RAOs, and then the same RAOs could then each indicate which are of current priority to them.

4.2.6 RAO engagement with GPRS II process

The baseline survey questionnaire included a multiple option question, about eight possible ways in which the RAOs might have participated in the GPRS II process. Their responses are shown in Table 10 below. "1" = some form of engagement.

5. Sharing and updating the baseline survey results

1. The baseline results will be fed back to all the participating RAOs, for correction. Small scale changes will be incorporated in the above tables and figures without explanation. Large scale changes will be used to generate new tables and figures, and there will be some explanatory comment made about the changes made. Old copies will be retained for reference purposes.
2. Agreement will be sought to make the summary tables and network diagrams publicly available on the G-RAP website.
3. The baseline results will be updated at least annually, on the basis of information provided in the RAO Progress and Financial Reports to G-rap., and any other available sources that are reliable.

6. Availability of the collated raw data

The collated survey data is held in an Excel file. Agreement will be sought to make this data publicly available on request, subject to the users willingness to publicly share any analysis they make of the data in that file. For more information contact Rick Davies

7. What are the limitations of this survey?

1. Not all the grantees responded (see list below)
 2. Some respondents (5 of 12) did not want to prioritise the importance of different relationships. This will make it more difficult to assess the significance of changes in RAO relationships during and after funding form G-RAP
 - o Some mis-understood the 100 point scheme for allocating relative priority. These errors have been corrected
 3. The data that is provided is about the existence of working relationships, but not what kind of working relationship was involved. In this respect the survey is a crude cross-section of what was going on in 2005, and much more work would be needed to detail what kinds of working relationships were taking place. Because there were working relationships, of one kind or another, with 268 different organisations some sort of selectivity in this detailing would be essential. One way of doing it is through attending to prioritised relationships, and relationships which are structurally similar to those of other key actors, and thereby raise the issue of coordination. For more on this approach, see
 4. The categories used to describe the key components of the GPRS II were taken from the headings used in a draft version of the GPRSII made available in July 2005. The heading structure was subsequently changed in the final ("November 2005) version that became available on the NDPC website in early 2006. The categories used by a subsequent World Bank survey on donor engagement with GPRS II themes were also slightly different, partly because of particular interests, and partly because the ambivalent structure of the GPRS II document.

3. How the network diagrams were created

All the network diagrams on this page have been constructed with UCINET and then NetDraw. NetDraw tries to minimise the overlap of lines connecting nodes, to make the structure of the relationships in the network as visible as possible. In some cases above, e.g. Figure 4, the resulting network diagram has then been manually adjusted to minimise overlap in labels.
